DEAF SMITH.

A Duel Famous in the Annals of Texas.

HOUSTON'S BOSOM FRIEND.

Frontiersman, for Whom One of the Counties of the Lone Star State is Named.

The main corridor of the magnificent building at Austin, Tex., there hangs an imposing painting, 25x15 feet, at least, in a massive frame. The figures are a man and a woman, the man in a military uniform, the woman in a simple dress. The man is looking at the woman with a look of intense interest. The woman is looking at the man with a look of intense interest. The man is looking at the woman with a look of intense interest. The woman is looking at the man with a look of intense interest.

Colonel Morton wrote again: "Who will be your second?" He answered with the pen: "I am too generous to seek an advantage, and too brave to fear any of the part of others, therefore, I need a second." The colonel then wrote: "Name your time." Again the stranger turned without a moment's hesitation: "Time, sunset this evening, place, the left bank of the Colorado, opposite Austin; weapons, rifles, and distance 100 yards." Then, taking three steps across the floor, he disappeared. "What is it possible, Colonel Morton, that you intend to fight that man?" He is a mute, if not a positive maniac. Such a meeting, I fear, will surely furnish the lustre of your laurels.

"You are mistaken," replied the colonel, "with a smile that showed his teeth. He is a man of war, and at least half as many bloody duels. Besides, he is the bosom friend of General Houston. If I have the good fortune to kill him, I think it will tempt the president to retract his vow against venturing any more on the field of honor." "Who is he?" inquired a dozen voices together. "Deaf Smith," answered Colonel Morton, coolly. "Deaf Smith" was killed at the battle of San Jacinto," remarked Judge Webb. "There again your honor is mistaken," said the colonel, "for the man who was killed was a mere fiction, gotten up by General Houston to save the life of his favorite Texas into whose conduct he had inquired as spy. I found that out at a year ago."

"Well, if what you say be true, you are a madman yourself," Colonel Morton, exclaimed. "Deaf Smith" was never known to miss his mark. "Say no more," answered the colonel; "I have agreed to meet him. There can be no disgrace in falling before such a shot, and if I should succeed, my triumph will confer greater glory."

his life and laid his hand on the butt of his immense bowie.

The sly colonel upon this movement, drew his dagger, and was in the act of advancing upon the stranger, when several friends interfered, and, holding him back, remonstrated: "Let him alone, Morton, God's sake! Don't you see the man's crazy?"

At this juncture Judge Webb, a man of fine intellect and a courteous gentleman in all his deportment, stepped toward the stranger and addressed him in a most respectful style: "My good friend, I presume you have made a mistake in the house. This is a private meeting, where none but members are admitted."

The intruder did not appear to understand the words of the judge, but he could not fail to comprehend the mild, deprecating manner in which he addressed him. His stern features relaxed immediately, and, moving toward a table in the middle of the room on which were writing materials, he took up a pen and traced one line: "I am dead." He then held it up before his audience as a sort of apology for his apparent lack of politeness.

Judge Webb took the paper and wrote a question upon it, and you will be so obliging as to inform us what your request business with the meeting?" The stranger responded promptly by handing a letter in which he had written the name of Austin. The judge broke the seal and read the contents aloud. It was from President Houston, and showed the terms of his challenge.

"Fellow Citizens: Though in error, and deceived by traitors, I will give you three minutes to decide whether you will surrender the public archives. At the end of that time you will please let me know your decision."

After the document had been read, the man waited a few seconds as if for a reply, then turned and was about to leave the hall, when Colonel Morton interposed and begged he to wait until he had finished again where he was still sitting. The stranger obeyed. Then the colonel took up a pen and wrote a question upon it, and you will be so obliging as to inform us what your request business with the meeting?"

chasing a spring stock of merchandise for Turnell & Trammell.

Messrs. G. J. Turnell and W. F. Bear don have returned from New York.

Editor Mark A. Candler is making the Madisonian's editorial page fairly bristle and sparkle. He is issuing one of the brightest papers in Georgia.

Mrs. M. Candler gave a most delightful entertainment last Tuesday evening, complimentary to Miss Mary Hardwick, a beautiful and accomplished young lady of Atlanta. Her lovely home on North Second street was ablaze with brilliant beauty and gaiety, the elite of Madison being present in force.

It is said that Indian creek abounds in wild ducks. Between the bridge, on the lower Monticello road and Shepherd's bridge, there is a large pond which is the roosting place of countless numbers of these migratory birds. At early twilight they begin pouring into this pond in dense drives and the flight is kept up until dark. Those who have seen them coming like it since the remarkable winter of 1879-80. This will afford a rare chance for some fine shooting by our sportsmen.

Duck shooting is most exciting sport by those who understand it, and, no doubt, some of our hunters could go out there and return well paid for their trouble.

Two negroes broke open the store of Mr. J. H. Cochran, of the lower part of the county, last Friday, carrying off quite a quantity of meat and flour. They were arrested by Sheriff Fears, and are now in the Morgan county jail.

A Morgan county man, Mr. J. H. Cochran, has about 4,000 yankee brass buttons that he traded for during the war. He swapped tobacco to the union soldiers for most of them, and a great part of the time "Yankee Doodle" had no buttons on his coat at all.

Morgan superior court convenes Monday, March 6th. A full docket will greet Judge Jenkins when he arrives.

Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Guest gave an elegant dinner this evening, complimentary to some of their friends. Their elegant home on North Second street is the most hospitable in the city, and those present spent a pleasant evening.

Mr. C. M. Furlow, Jr., recently of the Madison postoffice under the Cleveland administration. He considers his chances for a meeting with Mr. J. C. Anderson are the other applicants for the position. Mr. Anderson has resorted to the novel way of calling on the ladies to sign his petition, and it is said has about a thousand names of the fair sex on his list.
